I'm pretty sure the location was given as it was because there was no required signage posted and nobody will enforce that rule. So, I had to use old Google map information from before construction began. We can specify that violation on their part officially. And I will file it.

Is the board protecting polluters again by using their violations as a defense?

My cousin used to work for the speaker of the house so I have been reaching out. Maybe you've seen the news regarding NEPA he recently announced. If the board is allowing permit holders not to post required signage used to petition the government and then letting them use that as a defense, he would like to know about that violation of civil liberties. Please advise.
