Opering levd 🍖 Q

By Phillip Alder

In the Netherlands, you are not allowed to play on an 18-hole golf course unless you have a Golf Ability Card. You must pass a fairly easy test of your driving, chipping and putting.

Should we do the same in bridge setting players leaving beginners' classes a few simple bidding, declarerplay and defense problems? If so, do you think today's deal would be slightly too difficult for the test, or just right? West leads the club gueen against your four-heart contract. How would you plan the play? There are three passes and South opens one heart. Should West pass. double or bid two clubs? Most inexperienced players bid two clubs. However, I think that is the third-best choice. With such soft values opposite a partner who couldn't even open in third position, there is a good case for passing. Especially in a pair event, though, you should strive to contest the partscore. Note that a takeout double gives you three chances to find a fit, whereas two clubs will probably lock you into that suit. Playing in four hearts, South must not win trick one with dummy's club king and lead a trump. With this layout, the contract can then be defeated, South losing one spade, two hearts and one diamond. It is right to win in hand with the club ace and immediately lead the diamond jack. If West wins with the ace and continues clubs, you discard two spade losers on dummy's diamond royals, play a trump to the ace and another trump.
