

Dear Illinois Pollution Control Board,

5-31-11

Illinois coal plants are a significant source of air pollution in our state. Nevertheless, for more than 11 years, they have been allowed to operate without federal operating permits (also known as "Title V" permits or "CAAPP" permits). In Chicago we have Fisk and Crawford.

The federal Clean Air Act requires major sources of air pollution to have operating permits. But when the coal plant operators appealed the permits, even for minor reasons, the Pollution Control Board stayed the permits in their entirety. This stopped the permits from going into effect, and they remain stayed five years later—the whole duration of the permit term! This stalemate threatens public health and air quality. The time has come to lift the stays and resolve these appeals.

We appreciate the Board's work over the years to protect the public by issuing air pollution rules. We ask you now to ensure that polluting coal plants abide by these rules and that the operating permits take effect.

Please help us make Chicago an ever greener city with good air. Environmental sensors with moderate ozone alerts. We can do even more!

Sincerely,
