Board: Integrated math recommended

From Day AS

Board members also heard a report from high school math teacher Mi-chelle Lillis on changing math instruction for eighth-grade through high school students.

grade through high school students.

The current approach is through "traditional math pathways," which take students through much cooper in a segmented way first learning algebra and then moving on to geometry and other specialized areas.

The district is considering switching to an integrated approach Ms. Lillie said would fine the various math concepts together and make them more applicable to the real world. She said students in kinderparten to the real world. She said students in kindergarten through eighti grade already receive integrated math instruction, and extending that approach could improve the flow of learning.
