Doing so will create significant health care and other pollution-related costs. It will also make it more difficult for these plant to reduce their CO2 emissions should any carbon tax be enacted. Voters are increasingly aware that when CO2 is not taxed, all of the taxpayers end up paying for the pollution instead of the polluter. Demanding compliance now will greatly reduce pollution levels and place the power producer in a more viable position should some form of carbon tax be passed, instead of just kicking the can down the road.

Lee Canel

As a new high school physics and chemistry teacher in the early 1970's I also created an introductory science class called Environmental Science, with units like Water Pollution, Air Pollution, etc. Air Pollution caused by coal based power plants was already a problem, especially in Chicago.

It is hard to believe that 40 years later these plants are requesting another five year pass to continue polluting.

The owners of coal plants, or any other plant for that matter, should be responsible for ensuring that their operations are performed in an environmentally sound manner. Allowing plants to operate in a manner that causes pollution and harms the surrounding areas is not acceptable.

Dear Illinois Pollution Control Board,

The cost to medicate a person with asthma is conservatively $3300 per year--not to mention lost school and work time. Giving Dynegy a free pass to pollute comes at the price of human health, and peoples right to learn and work. Stop putting big corporate polluters interests ahead of the Illinois people, whom you are charged to serve. Enough is enough.
